

food system change
online congress

Foodcoops

Foodcoops (also: food cooperatives) are associations of individuals and households that purchase sustainable food products in a self-organised manner.

The communities are self-governing and not for profit; the members do the work themselves.

sustainability potential

- targeted support of farmers pursuing a sustainable food production: the criteria can be a regional, seasonal, organic and fair food production
- direct producer-consumer trade adds selling options for producers aside from mainstream options
- high transparency, high confidence
- access to high quality organic food for financially disadvantaged consumers

